Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This row of sixteen two-story, two-bay wide Renaissance Revival-style brick houses with shed roofs and sheet metal cornices were built c. 1900 – 1905. About half of the houses retain their original brick facades, which were always painted; the remainder have been covered with formstone. The west end house (2152) has a very unusual angled corner—one bay of the house, containing the door is flush with the rest of the row but the other bay is set at an angle to the row and to the side of the house.

The houses are two stories in height, three small rooms deep and there is no backbuilding. The houses are constructed in common bond and were originally painted. Each house has a single hooded chimney located at the rear corner of the house. The shed roofs are capped by a sheet metal cornice consisting of a crown molding supported by two end brackets, whose arched caps rise slightly above the roofline. The brackets frame a lower frieze area articulated with narrow molding bands.

The tall, narrow window and door openings have segmentally arched brick lintels, composed of a double row of headers, and plain tympanums. Several sets of the original 2/2 sash survive, but most windows are filled with 1/1 replacement sash. The sills are a mix of wood, brick, and stone. Doorways have single-light transoms and show a variety of replacement door types. The houses sit on medium-height basements, lit by a single-or double-light sash. Each house is reached by four or five concrete or marble steps.

Builder/Architect

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

This group of houses significant as representing the level of architectural stylishness builders were willing to give to small street houses in the late nineteenth century and is testament to the fact that their was no stigma attached to small street living. The houses were built according to a pattern that was quite common to the city's working class neighborhoods of the period c. 1870 to 1910. Recognizing that workers held different levels of jobs (and pay), builders created a hierarchy of house sizes (and prices) in the new neighborhoods going up to serve the expanding factory districts ringing the harbor and northeast and southwest of the central city. Builders acquired anywhere from an eighth to a half of a city block and built 14' to 15'-wide three-bay-wide, two-story houses on the main streets, and smaller, 11' to 13'-wide two-bay-wide, two-story houses on the narrower streets bisecting the blocks. Typically, in this period, main street houses might sell for $1,200 - $1,500; small street houses for $700 - $900.

Occasionally, the builder retained ownership of his small street houses to provide income for himself as rental properties. In this way people of varying means could afford to live in the same block. If they couldn't afford the approximately $750 purchase price of the small street houses, then they could afford the $8 or so a month it would cost to rent one, while they saved to be able to buy their own home later.

The houses are especially significant because of their proximity to the slaughterhouses of southwest Baltimore and their related industries, particularly the William Wilkens & Co. Curled Hair Manufactory, one of the largest employers in the area. A number of German-American owned breweries were also located in this section of the city. Moderately-priced housing was built to provide homes for the mainly German immigrants who came to southwest Baltimore to work in these rapidly expanding industries in the decades after the Civil War.
